Software Developement:

In Week 4, our team made significant progress on the Tarpaulin Ticketing System project. We began implementing user access control and dashboard separation for each role. Based on updated requirements, we adjusted the system to support four user types: Requestor, Admin, Department Head, and Printer. Each role has specific responsibilities, so we focused on designing the appropriate dashboard layout and access permissions for each.

Technical Documentation Skills:

We updated our system flow diagrams to reflect the changes in user roles and request processes. We also documented the revised database structure and started preparing a role-based access guide. These updates helped align our documentation with the actual development, ensuring that future users and developers can easily understand the systems logic.

Other IT-Related Activities:

One of the most important moments this week was getting the opportunity to speak directly with the CIO staff. They explained how the actual tarpaulin request process work in their office, which helped us understand their workflow and expectations.
